Chapter 5: Data Link Layer Silvia Giordano ICA, EPFL The data-link layer is responsible for transferring a datagram across an individual link. A link is the communication channels that connect two adjacent hosts or routers. Examples of link-layer protocols include Ethernet, token ring, FDDI, and PPP. 2

Chapter 5: Data Link Layer

In this lesson we examine the data link layer - its services, the principles underlying its operation, and a number of important data link layer protocols. We learn that the basic service of the data link layer is to move a network-layer datagram from one node (host or router) to an adjacent node.

a functional model consisting of two layers, the Data Link Layer and the Physical Layer. Sections 6 and 7 specify the two layers in detail, providing the primary technical specification of the Ethernet. Section 8 provides a description and specification for a configuration testing protocol for Network Management services.
