application of membranes and membrane processes: In the first area are applications where the use of membranes is technically feasible, but there are other processes with which membranes must compete on the basis of overall economy. This, for instance, is the case in seawater desalination and the treatment of certain waste-water streams.

This article discusses membrane processes to provide an effluent for discharge, or feedstock for a reuse process, and will focus on membranes used within MBRs. Since membrane filtration increases the cost of wastewater treatment, MBRs are mainly used where significant value is added to the wastewater stream.
